

From: RWB
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/28/02 10:15pm
Subject: Microsoft Settlement

The proposed settlement does not begin to address the market arrogance and bullying behavior which characterized Microsoft's marketing over the past decade. The public destruction of Netscape by giving away it's browser for free and then simply including it in the operating system are just one of many acts which the company has taken to reduce or destroy competition.

The beginnings of a sufficient remedy would include requiring Microsoft to cease to offer a browser at all and to agree to never sell a product at less than a competitive product even if they have a minority market share. The agreement not to sell must be adjusted for the effects of "bundling" which Microsoft has used not only against Netscape but also WordPerfect and many others.

Rodger Barkus

(formerly Software Association of Oregon board member and the COO of a software company.)